The long century from 1739 to 1857, from Nadir Shah's massacre of the inhabitants of Delhi to the brutal crushing of the Sepoy rebellion—has long been considered a twilight period in the history of Delhi. This is a period, after all, of the repeated conquest and looting of Delhi, the rapid decline of Mughal military and political power, and the ascendancy of the British East India Company. But as Saif Mahmood's marvellous new book, Beloved Delhi: A Mughal City and Her
